Take two musicians. 15 years ago they collaborate. Then their lives diverge. They continue to write together but one spends the 15 years in the music business, in the charts, touring the world, playing with legends. The second spends the 15 years in the wilderness. The first is Dominic Greensmith. He spent 10 years in one of Britain's most popular rock bands, Reef. He's played with legends like Peter Gabriel and Ray Davies. The second is Gareth Hale. He was tempted back from the wilderness with a bunch of great songs and a burning desire to play them. So, 15 years on and now they're back on the same musical path and it's taking us somewhere very interesting. Jesse Wood, son of Rolling Stones Ronnie Wood, and John Hogg joined. And The Black Swan Effect was born. Hints of Radiohead's Pablo Honey and the vocals of Jeff Buckley meet Bob Dylan and the Rolling Stones - relaxed, joyful contemporary rock.
