He's been called a 'master of polyrhythm'. Although Bourassa's compositions are audacious and complex, the listener is never left behind. Rhythmic and melodic references allow the audience to keep up and follow a remarkable, exciting and constant musical exploration. Guy Boisvert and Philippe Melanson's rhythm section illuminates the progression through the sophisticated harmonies of Bourassa's piano and the bold melodies of André Leroux's sax and flute. And you really should watch Melanson's incredible gestures and moves on drums, it's worth it! The quartet obviously shares an exceptional musical understanding and complicity and manages to express the many subtle layers of a permanent musical emotion. François Bourassa leads one of Canada's most active recording and touring jazz ensembles, which will soon celebrate its 25th birthday.
